Andrew and Imogene

Little Life Confidences in the Experience of a Couple Philropic, Though Married.

By ROY FULPERSON
"I paid your department store bill today," said Andrew, with a smile.
"Thank you, dear," said Imogene sweetly.

"For the life of me thought I don't see how you can run up such bills!" Andrew was impatient. "It looks to me like you just went down to that store and ran on a mad spree of buying a wild orgy of shopping. I don't see why you don't look around a little more! There is not so much shopping to do in this town, take your time about it and look for the place where they sell the cheapest."

"I am sorry you haven't time to go with me, dear," said Imogene, with just a suspicion of an angry glint in her eye.

"Go with you," exclaimed Andrew. "I could do in an hour all the shopping you do in a week. I wouldn't have to shop and gossip and fool around in every store."

Then Imogene would give him a few things this afternoon, dear, and I certainly wish you would leave your office 15 minutes earlier than usual and get them for me. I always had an idea you were afraid to go into a department store."

"Afraid?" blustered Andrew. "Afraid of what?"

"Well, I wish you would go for me. I want to go to the house-furnishing department and ask that blonde girl if she has that cassowary for me yet, and if so, why she doesn't send it out, and then go down into the basement and get a cake of soap for the kitchen scrubbing and bring this home with you."

"Then I want you to run over to the fancy goods department and get me some darning silk to darn your silk socks with. The girl who are there will get a pin cushion to fit that cover your sister Alice sees—you can put the pins in your pocket so you will get it to fit."

"Then home is over to the tailored goods counter and get me a piece of flea soap to wash the dog and while you are there get me a hard toothbrush, a stick of shaving soap, a comb, a brush, a soap dish, a nail file, and 50 cents' worth of sachet powder, violet, and two little bags of spoons of cotton white. No. 20 and a bodkin for threading a baby ribbon into things—you will have to go to the notion counter for those."

"Then I want you to go down into the grocery department where they are having a special sale of peaches and if they are stone stones get them ears, but if they are free stones get six cans—they are three for a quarter."

Take this coupon and go to the soda fountain and try that new headache remedy they are advertising—it is free and if it is any good I am going to buy some."

"Then I want you to go down to the gas office and show them this last month's bill and the bill for the same month last year and ask them how it comes that although we were away two weeks this year and the house locked up the bill was bigger than last year."

"On your way up street from the gas office I want you to stop at that Chinese store and get me some of those lines you clause in a bow of wax on the window sill, they are six for a quarter but if you just tell the Chinaman he will give you seven or eight! When you come away from there I want you to—"

She stopped there because he had fallen back in his chair in imitation of a fainting man!

The troops, according to the man's story, were organized at Juarez and their equipment included 600 horses recently purchased by the Mexican government from the United States remount station at Fort Riley. The Mexican said he was given safe conduct by General Angeles.
